Welcome to the second edition of The Edgeletter.

Are you toying with the idea of using tablets for in-the-field assessments and audits but not convinced that they are right for your workplace? Or trying to convince someone else that they are? We have a number of tablets (Windows and Apple) that we loan out for free.

Contact us at info@edgelearning.com.au for information.

WHAT IF THE WORKER CAN'T GET TO THE CLASSROOM?

It's pretty obvious really.

A client was looking for a better way to deliver underground training. So we developed a solution that takes the training into the work environment, delivers it instantly and enables an incredibly effective method of instant feedback that reinforces the training and can be used as evidence of competency. So now the training is delivered to exactly the right person at exactly the right time in exactly the right place. No more wasted time, no more wasted paper and no more bored learners.

Another effective, efficient, engaging learning solution!!!

TO EARN... OR NOT TO EARN

Whenever we get our hands on a new training tool, we have a tendency to embrace it a little too tightly. Remember those dizzying powerpoint presentations full of animations? And many of us fell into the same trap with elearning.

Elearning is a fantastic tool when used in the right way, but sitting through a 120 page elearning module is just as excruciating as a 120 slide powerpoint presentation. In fact, elearning is often a solitary activity so there is not even the opportunity to commiserate with fellow sufferers...I mean learners.

So, like any training tool, use elearning to deliver the right training to the right audience at the right time. And always, always, always make it interesting for the learner. If you can't do that, go back to the classroom or, even better, into the workplace to deliver the training.

Check the USB stick for our 5 question elearning checklist to see if elearning may be right for your training need. Or contact us if you would like some help to determine the best solution for your needs.
